- Abstract: When studying the system within literary texts, we must know the types of sentences, and they are either received for the purpose of informing and describing the meaning, or for the purpose of creating the meaning from the beginning and asking for its occurrence, and this is what is called Linguistic structures. Linguistic structures, then, formulate two types of sentences for us, which are the statement sentence and the construction sentence, and the statement sentence is described as a predicate structure whose content can be described as true or false.
